SHATTERED ROUND

Shattered was my first piece inspired by process. I was anxious to see how I could create random patterns by splitting and assembling different sized and shaped pieces of wood. I also hoped through the physical art of organizing the chaotic pile of wood it would somehow convey the energy required to do so.

What was unexpectedly discovered was the aroma that was released by the fall of the axe. The thud and crack as the wood fibers tore apart. This took me back to when I was a young teenager cutting wood during the summer months on Vancouver Island.
